The News Review

By BRUCE CATTON

HARRY L. HOPKINS' promise that the federal government must and will evolve a distinctively American method of dealing with the stupendous problem of unemployment relief, and will not be content to copy some European system, is a bright bit of good news.

Trade Revival Is Forecast for U. S.

Current Rise Expected to Increase, Survey Shows

NEW YORK. (AP)—There are definite signs of a "strong revival" of retail buying during the autumn months, said Dun and Bradstreet in their weekly trade review Friday, "and barring prolonged labor disturbances, the current rise is expected to be strengthened gradually until joined by the forceful momentum of the holiday shopping season."

The survey declared that the moderate expansion of commercial bank loans may be interpreted not only as indicative of plans for extending fall industrial activities beyond earlier estimates, but also attests to the better financial position which numerous firms have been able to achieve.

Regarding the week's developments in the retail merchandise fields, the review asserted that higher prices for the major products and the benefit payments under the corn, hog and cotton reduction program "were responsible for the enlarged distribution in the country districts, while the further widening of governmental projects and the termination of the summer vacation period in a number of industries lifted purchasing power in urban sections."

"The placement of so many orders which should have been released in July and August carried volume in many wholesale markets 10 to 15 per cent above the comparative 1933 figures."

Mary Delia Carrigan Is Awarded U. of A. Honors

These scholarships grant exemption from the payment of matriculation, registration and library fees.

Miss Mary Delia Carrigan of Hope is listed among the 58 students awarded scholarships by the University.

Grammar System Only Solution to School Problems

Any Other Plan Would Require Additional Money, Partain Says

DELIVERS DEMO TALK

Graves Mentioned for Democratic Post at Spa Convention

HOT SPRINGS. (AP)—Governor Futrell's plan for a state grammar school system was termed "only real, sonable" solution to the public school problem in Arkansas by Dave Partain, Van Buren attorney, in a keynote address to the biennial Democratic state convention here Friday.

Any other plan would require additional money, Partain said, and the people will not permit a raise in taxes.

The governor is not opposed to high school and higher education, but his position is that present conditions make any other program impossible for the state's schools.

If conditions improve, more educational advantages can be provided. Lack of finances alone permits a solution to the state's school problems, and until conditions improve we can only do the best we know how, the speaker declared.

The old state central committee met for a few minutes, long enough to certify to the convention the names of all nominees in recent primaries.

Although all counties had not sent in an official vote on the auditor's race, Charles Parker of Stephens, was certified as the nominee over the incumbent, Oscar Humphrey.

Graves Talked for Chairmanship. HOT SPRINGS. (AP)—Democratic leaders converged upon Hot Springs Friday for the biennial party convention.

Governor Futrell, who is to address the convention, declined to name his choice for chairman of the state central committee, the highest office in the party, before the meeting starts at noon.

But he is expected to choose between James D. Head, Texarkana, Henry Armstrong, Fort Smith, and the present chairman, Judge Lee Miles of Little Rock. These were more prominently mentioned for the post since State Bank Commissioner Marion was emphatically declined to become interested in heading the party machinery.

There was talk, however, that O. A. Graves of Hope, who managed the governor's recent campaign, would be elevated to the chairmanship despite his passive attitude. He is known to be close to Governor Futrell.

Supreme Penalty for Woman Slayer

Mrs. Eva Coo Convicted for Killing Crippled Handy Man

COOPERSTOWN, N. Y. (AP)—Mrs. Eva Coo, 47-year-old inn keeper, was convicted of murder Thursday of her crippled handy man, Harry Wright, to collect his insurance. Death is the penalty.

The jury was out a little more than two hours.

Mrs. Coo is a native of Halliburton, Ontario. She left home when she was 17, almost 30 years ago. Her family lost track of her until the trial began. She is a widow.

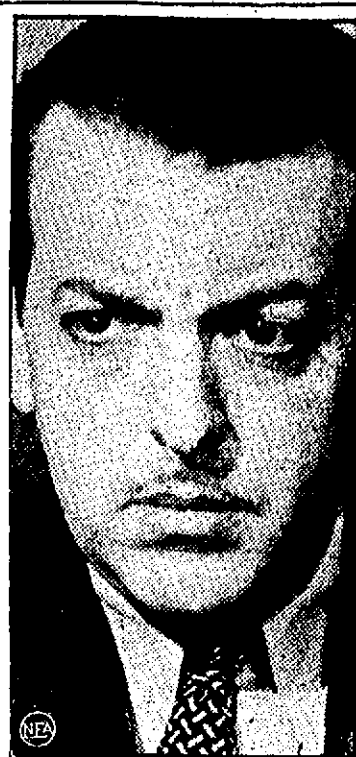

Wright was killed on June 14 near Onondaga. She stated Mrs. Coo and Mrs. Martha Clift inspired to kill Wright for his insurance. Mrs. Clift, turning state's evidence, declared that Mrs. Coo knocked the crippled man unconscious with a mallet. Mrs. Clift admitted driving an automobile across the highway.

The murder was alleged to have been committed near a hut-infested "haunted house" on the side of Crumhorn mountain.

Wright's body was found beside a highway not far from Mrs. Coo's inn. Mrs. Coo trembled violently when the jury returned the verdict of murder in the first degree.

Spectators in the crowded courtroom clapped loudly. Supreme Court Justice Ripley H. Heath, banged his gavel sternly for silence.

FDR Strike Board Is Seeking Peace

Will Meet Union Leaders Employers "Quickly as Possible"

WASHINGTON. (AP)—President Roosevelt's textile strike inquiry board went quickly into action Friday with the announcement that it would meet representatives of strikers and employers "as rapidly as possible."

The announcement was made just before the board met with Secretary of Labor Perkins.

At the same time strike leaders said that a decision on adding workers in rayon, synthetic yarn, dyeing, hosiery and other miscellaneous divisions of the industry would be made at a series of meetings to be held over the week-end.

Lull in Carolina Strike

CHARLOTTE, N. C. (AP)—A gentle rain and bayonets of half a hundred National Guard companies cooled jangling nerves in strike-torn Carolinas Friday.

A lull in the textile worker's campaign for complete close down of the industry found approximately 110,000 idle.

An accurate check was difficult as some mills re-opened under protection of guardmen and others were closed by flying squadrons.

WASHINGTON. (AP)—Both Francis J. Gorman, chairman of the textile strike committee and George A. Sloan, president of the cotton textile institute, agreed Friday to meet representatives of strike boards within the next six hours and discuss problems.

Auto Accident Fatal to Woman

Texarkana Lawyer Hurt When Car Leaves Road Near Gurdon

GURDON, Ark. (AP)—Miss Anneta Newman, aged about 30, of Texarkana, was killed and Bert Lacey, about 40, a Texarkana lawyer, was injured, but not seriously, in an automobile accident on highway 67, three miles north of Gurdon early Thursday night.

Miss Newman was Mr. Lacey's secretary, and had been in his car for about eight years. They were returning to Texarkana from Arkadelphia.

Mr. Lacey told a traveling salesman who was first on the scene that he lost control of his automobile when he looked back into a rear seat. The car went into a ditch and turned over.

Both Miss Newman and Mr. Lacey got out of the overturned car and walked up the embankment. Lacey lay down on the highway. Miss Newman asked him if he was hurt badly and he replied that he believed that he was. She attempted to help him when suddenly she fell dead. It was believed she was injured internally.

Physicians who examined Mr. Lacey said that he sustained only bruises and lacerations. He returned to Texarkana Thursday night. The body of Miss Newman probably will be sent to El Dorado, her former home for burial. She is survived by a sister, Mrs. Catney, the wife of an El Dorado physician.

Long Is Facing Greatest Crisis in Next Primary

Triumph in New Orleans Vital to Maintain His Hold on State

HAS HECTIC CAREER

Kingfish Wilds Every Weapon to Avert Ruin in September Vote

This is the first of three illuminating stories on Huey Long and the crisis he faces in Louisiana's September 11 primary, written by a New Orleans newspaperman, thoroughly familiar with Long's spectacular career since its beginning.

BY JAMES E. CROWN
City Editor, New Orleans States
(Written for NEA Service)

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Senator Huey P. Long is swinging every ounce of his bower against his opposition to win the New Orleans primary on September 11.

He is employing all of his skill in the air and on paper, all his control over the mass of his machine, and all the intimidation he can throw against the people generally, with armed men in uniform and out of it, to emerge victorious.

If he can go to the next opening of Congress with this victory to his credit, and if he can show by a triumph in New Orleans that he has whipped the entire state into line for he does not believe that any part of Louisiana would oppose him if he wins this fight he hopes to be able to smother any attack against him in Washington where he is expecting to have trouble in the senate.

The federal income tax investigation is pressing closer to him and his principal appointees.

Back of the ordering of troops to New Orleans; back of the special session of the legislature, with its amazing measures to snatch local government control from all communities in the state; and put the power in his hands; back of the determination to throw a herd of armed deputies into every voting precinct in Louisiana; and back of his defiance of the courts, is Long's battle plan which he has consistently followed since he announced his intentions after winning the governorship in 1928.

Good for 30 Years
To Col. Robert Ewing, a political war lord and owner of newspapers in New Orleans and Shreveport, the man who made Long politically, Long said a few weeks before he entered the governor's mansion:

"I'm good for 30 years. Four years as governor; I can't succeed myself under the laws of the state, but I can put in a dummy when my term is over and go to the United States Senate, then back as governor again, with a dummy in the Senate; and repeat."

Thirty fast and juicy years, and when I am 60, I will retire, travel around the world and enjoy myself. This was before his break with Ewing.

The first third of the program is nearly accomplished, and Long is laying his plans now to take the governorship in 1936.

The present junior senator from Louisiana, John H. Overton, gives Long no worries, and he can find another man as his successor who will jump to his master's voice like all the other Long jobholders. And so on—the cycle to be repeated twice more. BUT—

Money Is Running Out
The federal government is on the one hand pushing its income tax investigation against Long with all the resources at its command, and on the other Long has suffered enormous loss of prestige with the people whose word was formerly the inspired voice of the temple.

The money is running out—the hundred million dollar bond issue of the state and of the parishes, the spending of which Long controlled either by his own fiat or through court house cliques.

Without money he cannot hold his voting ranks firm. This is the reason for his attack and his raising of the vice-graft battle cry in New Orleans.

There is plenty of vice, gambling, and what-have-you in New Orleans, but there is plenty of the same in the adjoining parishes of St. Bernard and Jefferson, which are a part of the city in every sense except a political one.

These are two Long strongholds, the last of his mighty camps in the state, with reported voting registrations greater than the entire population as given in the United States census.

Long has not turned a finger to stop the gambling, etc., in Jefferson and St. Bernard; and he will cease to throw troops and investigating committees into New Orleans when and if he reduces this city to his vassalage.

Myers On Stand in Co-Ed's Death
College Youth Says He Loved Her—Planned to Get Married

NORMAN, Okla. (AP)—Neal Myers loved Marian Mills, University of Oklahoma beauty queen, and was "sort of" engaged to marry her, he told the jury trying him on a murder charge in connection with the co-ed's death.

Calmly he related from the witness chair the details of their romance that culminated in the tragic death of the girl in the Hazel Brown apartment here July 10.

State Closes Case
NORMAN, Okla. (AP)—The state closed its case against Neal Myers, University of Oklahoma junior on Thursday, on the testimony of a medical expert that Marian Mills, co-ed beauty queen, died of shock following an attempted illegal operation.

Immediately defense attorneys went to a conference to discuss a possible charge will not testify until Friday, young Myers, on charge for a murder charge, will not testify until Friday. They had planned to use him as the first witness.

"It is my opinion that there was an attempted abortion, that this girl died very suddenly and that she died of shock," testified Dr. Hugh Jeter, University of Oklahoma pathologist and chief of the state's corps of medical witnesses.

Four Negroes Are Seriously Hurt When Cars Collide

DALLAS, Texas. (AP)—An automobile collision early Friday caused the death of two white women, the probable fatal injury of the white man in whose car they rode and the serious injury of four negroes in another car.

Shortly before the crash occurred at a street intersection in the residence district, C. E. Whitney of Los Angeles, also a salesman for California Baker Oil Tools, Inc., had parted from Rount and the two women at a local hotel. The two couples had been to a night

Four Local Men to Face Trial in Cotton Gin Blaze

Bradley Co. Grand Jury Names Crowsone, Hutson, Crawford, Wheaton

ONE PLEADS GUILTY

Fifth Indictment Returned Against Louisiana Man

WARREN, Ark. (Special)—Indictments charging arson were returned against five men by the Bradley county grand jury in session this week it was learned Friday.

The indictments named Charles Crowsone, Jesse Hutson, Tommy Crawford and Chris Wheaton; the latter a negro, all of Hope. The fifth indictment was against Ben F. Wilson of Minden, La.

The negro Wheaton pleaded guilty. His sentence was stayed until September 14, the trial date of the other four men.

Were Arrested Here
Arson charges returned by the Bradley county grand jury resulted from the alleged burning of a cotton gin at Banks, Ark., the night of April 10, last.

A few days following their arrests, officers announced that Crawford and the negro Wheaton had signed written confessions as to their part in the burning of the gin.

At that time all were released under bond except the negro, who was jailed at Warren.

Following a lead furnished by State Fire Marshal U. A. Gentry of Little Rock, Chief of Police Clarence Baker and Officers Burke and Turner made an investigation here which resulted in the arrests.

First Clue in Case

The first clue in the cotton gin fire was discovered by Sheriff Beard of Bradley county. He picked up a kerosene-saturated box near the burned gin site, which bore the signature of 555 Service Station, Little Rock.

Fire Marshall Gentry traced the box from the Little Rock station to a Texaco service station in Hope. Police located the handler of the box here, leading to the identification of the men who bought a can of kerosene at the station the night the gin burned.

The cotton gin at Banks was owned by a farmer, J. A. Lee.

Methvin Linked Grapevine Case

Officers Believe Convict Killed 2 Patrolmen Instead of Barrow

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP)—Henry Methvin, the 23-year-old former convict who betrayed his leader, Clyde Barrow, and Bonnie Barker into a machine gun nest of peace officers near Gibson, La., is being linked with the slaying last spring of two Texas highway officers at Grapevine, near Fort Worth, Texas.

Arrested by Sheriff T. R. Hughes in his office, when a trap which had been awaiting him for months was sprung, Methvin officially is being held for Sheriff Nugent of Grant parish, La., who has a warrant charging Methvin with complicity in the robbery of a bank at Montgomery, La., a short time before Bonnie Parker and Clyde Barrow were killed.

"I've got him dead to rights," Sheriff Nugent told Sheriff Hughes.

The Grapevine road slayings were formerly blamed on Clyde Barrow and his gun girl companion but new evidence has led officers to believe that it was Methvin and not Barrow who, with Bonnie Parker, shot down the policemen, they said.

Barrow is said to have been asleep in the rear of the car, one officer was quoted as saying.

Your Health

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

Heritage of Acquired Traits Is Doubtful.

The question of inheritance of disease or of mental defects, and its relationship to life, is more prominent in the public eye today than ever before in history.

The great social experiments being made in many countries, including human sterilization in Germany, have served to focus attention particularly on heredity.

There was a time when scientists believed that acquired characteristics could be transmitted. Now this view has been largely abandoned because of the lack of any experimental evidence to support it and also because it has been shown that the reproductive cells are separated from the rest of the growing child at an early stage in its development.

It was thought at one time that leprosy was hereditary; now we know it to be infective. Another early belief was that syphilis was hereditary; now we know that it is the organism of syphilis that is transmitted and that the disease itself is not truly hereditary.

However, there is good proof that human characteristics—both mental and physical—may be transmitted. For example, musical memory may run in families and, in fact, good memory altogether may be inherited in certain families.

The color of the eyes may be inherited, the shape of the chest, and the size of the body. This, of course, is a common observation which you can make for yourself.

However, so far as concerns sterilization of the human being to prevent the passing on of mental and physical defects, the actual knowledge is so deficient and so exceedingly uncertain as to cause considerable doubt on the rightfulness or usefulness of human sterilization on a large scale. Experts estimate that the lower one-fourth of the population is producing one-half of the next generation and that, therefore, there is a tendency for the lower half to multiply until it swamps the upper half.

The situation is complicated by the fact that the mentally defective strain may be transmitted by those who are not themselves mentally defective, so that one authority estimates that even the complete elimination of all the feeble-minded in the United States at one time would not eliminate feeble-mindedness since there would be more than 100,000 cases in the next generation resulting from "normals" who transmitted feeble-mindedness.

In the United States 27 states now have laws for sterilization of insane, feeble-minded, and epileptic, and in some states criminality is also included. There seems to be a great deal of difference of criminality, and there is also much disagreement as to what types of feeble-mindedness and mental deficiency ought to be considered.

Tells How Cruelty Produced a Revolt—"Babouk" Gives Modern Twist To Tale of Uprising

By BRUCE CATTAN

Guy Endore's new novel, "Babouk," begins mildly and ends like a call to arms.

He starts out to tell the story of a young negro who was captured in Africa by slavers in the middle of the 18th century and transported to a sugar plantation in San Domingo—and he winds up by getting grandfather's Civil War sabed down off the wall and going out to carve up the nearest capitalist.

It's all very disarmingly done, too. The book begins as a recital of those wrongs which we can all condemn—wrongs which were committed long ago, in a foreign land, by people long dead.

The horrors of the old slave trade, the infamies of the "middle passage," the almost incredible cruelties of the sugar despots in the San Domingian sugar fields, which make Simon Legree's attitude toward Uncle Tom look mild and friendly—these things give the reader full sympathy for the revolution by which the blacks finally overthrew French rule and either butchered their masters or drove them from the island.

But then, just as he reaches his climax, and describes this blood-curdling slave revolt, Mr. Endore steps

YOUR CHILDREN

By Olive Roberts Barton

Aid of Rich Kin Seldom Is Worth Its Anguish

Mr. Stewart was a rough old bachelor and a very good friend of the family.

He was such a good friend indeed that when Bobby was born he made it known that Bobby would never want for anything, that a college was already in view and that certain securities would before long be transferred to a trust fund in Bobby's name.

He always called Bobby "his boy." When he came on his regular monthly visit to the city, he just about lived with the Whites. No matter how late the baby was sleeping, he had to be awakened and handed over to "Uncle Bing" as he made all the children call him.

Then Uncle Bing would toss up the small limber-bugle to the ceiling, go "cooey, cooey, cooey" with a bearish paw in the middle of the baby's stomach, whether he had just been fed or not, and even once or twice picked him up by his pink heels and swung him head down over the carpet.

Ultior Motives

Mrs. White would say nothing, although her face would be a study in resentment and fright. There were the college education and bonds to think of. She thought it better to risk a stomach being upset than have Robert say some time, "If you hadn't offended Uncle Bing, I'd be better off. What did it matter if I had a stomachache once in a while?"

When Bobby was three he was still alive. Uncle Bing came one day with a dog—a big brute with three scars and four eyes.

"I found him, and I'd like you to keep him, Julie. I think he'll make you a good watch dog. I saw him in a fight and he's got form. I like animals with spirit—just as I like people with spirit. I hope Bob's going to be a scrapper like I was. Where is Bob?"

Bobbie Is Frightened

Mrs. White called Bobbie. He ran in, then ran out screaming when the "spirited" one rose, growled, bristled and showed his teeth.

"What? Afraid? Come back here, young fellow!" Uncle Bing caught him and set him on the dog's back. The dog snapped and Uncle Bing gave him a kick.

The dog eventually was tied in the yard.

"Look here, Julie, you're raising that boy to be a coward. Perhaps the dog is a bit strange and vicious, but children have to learn to get used to all kinds of things. See here, I'm leaving you fifty dollars to get Bobby some clothes and toys. I'll take the dog away."

Declaration of Independence

Mrs. White then said something. "I'm sorry, Uncle Bing. We can't take any more money, and you'll have to leave your stocks to someone else. Bobby is my child, and I have to raise him in my own way, without interference. You scare him, bully him, and shame him. He won't have any spirit left. You aren't encouraging him, you are breaking it!"

"Humph—that so? Sorry," Uncle Bing said. And he left in a huff.

A week later came a telegram. "Apologize. You're right. Like your own spirit. No one ever talked that way to me before. I'll mind my own business and let you run things."

Which every "friend of the family" should learn.

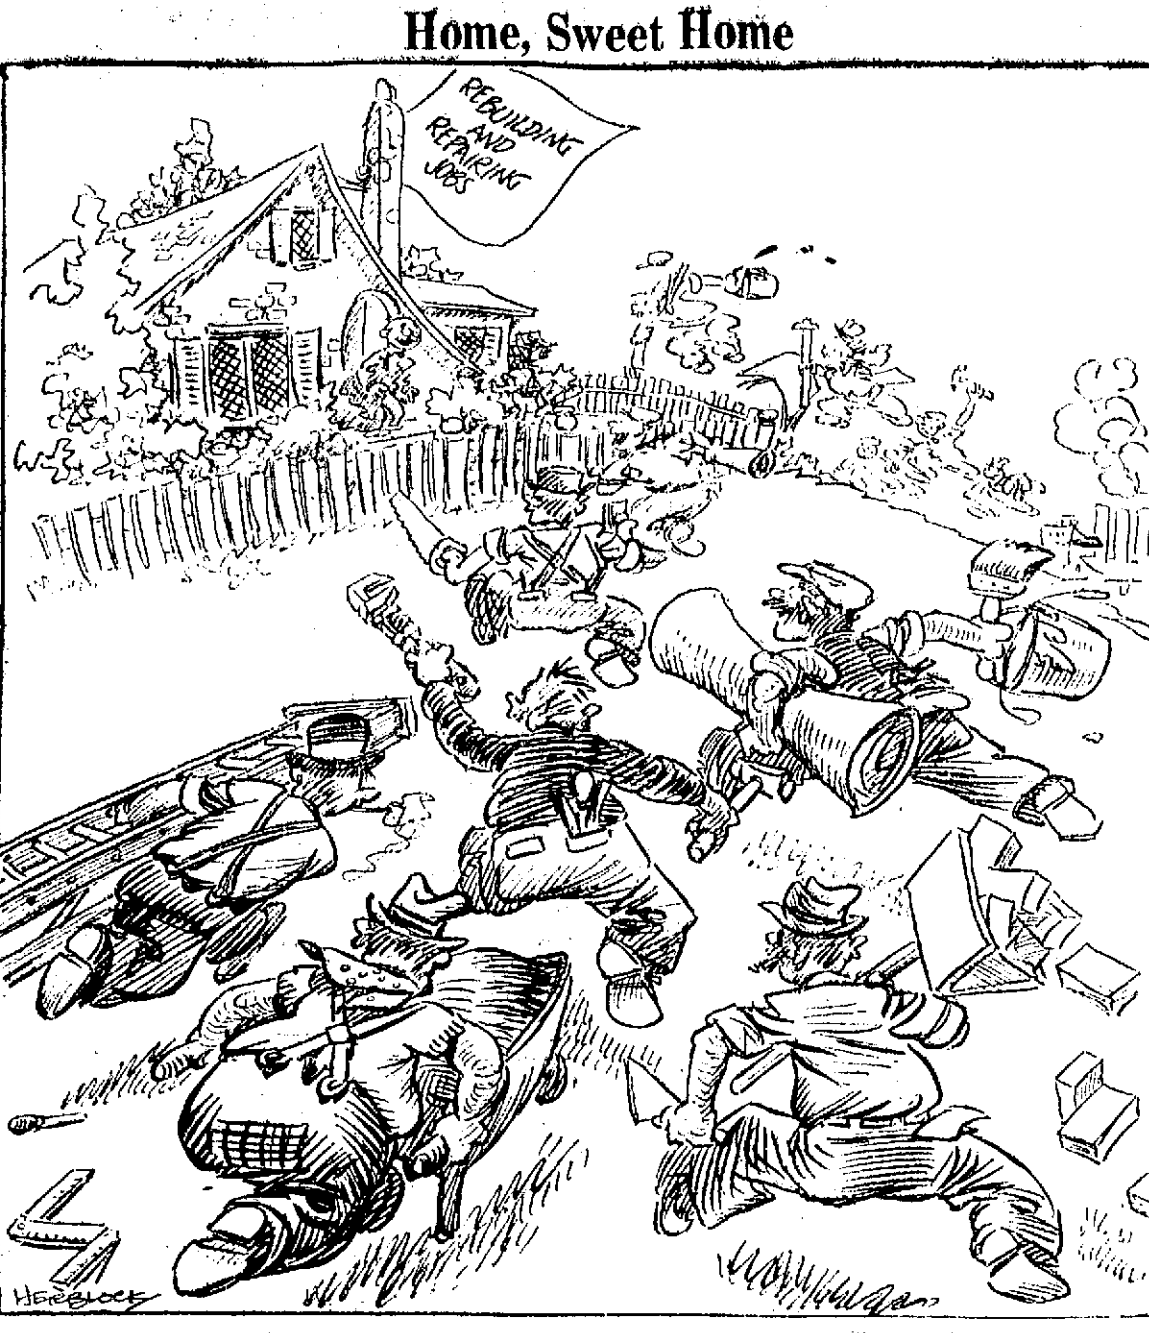

down to the year 1934 and draws his parallel. You discover, suddenly, that you are reading a very up-to-date revolutionary tract. Behind the fevered chanting of the San Domingian blacks you get none-too-faint overtones of the "Internationale."

You may find his parallel very far-fetched indeed; you may feel that he has spoiled a very moving novel. But "Babouk" is a powerful and impressive book, and it creates a mood that is apt to stay with you for a long time.

Published by Vanguard, the book is priced at $2.

BEACH CLUB GIRL

By MABEL McELLIOTT

BOOTS, a RABBIT, is and pretty, is a young woman, SYLVIA RIVERS. Due to Sylvia's gossip, Boots is forced to resign from the Junior. Both girls live in Larchbrook, fashionable New York suburb.

Hurt and humiliated, Boots accepts the attentions of MISS LIND, swimming instructor. MISS RIVERS returns from a trip out of town and Boots demands her mother's hearing what has happened. On impulse she carries Boots who takes her to live with his brother and his wife. Russ has no job and apparently no ambition. Soon Boots begins to see him as he is.

Russ goes to Miami, promising Boots he will send for her later. She gets a job in a big department store. After a few months she has the attack of influenza and is bedridden by DENIS TEX-WAY, young author.

NOV 10 ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXVI

BOOTS faced Denis Fenway across the expanse of a white cloth. There were drooping pink roses in a silver vase but Denis had set this vase aside so that he could see her better. He was smiling. What a nice smile he had, she thought idly. And yet she hadn't in the least liked him when she had first met him. He had seemed so superior—"snooty," she had called him to herself.

"So you're going back to work tomorrow?"

"I want—I'm terribly anxious to pay you back," she said, her voice thickening treacherously. She winked back the tears—it seemed to her that she was such a fool lately, always weeping about nothing at all. But Denis seemed not to notice, she was glad to observe. He was snubbing a cigarette out in the heavy holman ash tray.

"I wish you wouldn't worry so much about that." His matter-of-factness was heartening. He never asked questions; that was one of the nice things about him. Other people did—the nurse, even the doctor, Mrs. Mooney and the girls at the store. Everyone was so curious about her affairs. Not Denis. He accepted things as they were. He knew that she had married Russ, had broken with her family. Lois hadn't told him. He hadn't seen Lois. He had told her that Lois and Mr. Har were having a year in Germany. So he hadn't known a thing about—about her marriage.

"But you saw me that night, coming out of the Willowmere," Boots persisted. "You—I know you weren't thinking pleasant things about me that night."

The veil that sometimes came over Denis' dark eyes shut down at that moment. She was sorry she had said the words. She had a feeling she had hurt—perhaps offended him.

"Yes, I saw you." He looked away and his air of cold aloofness hurt her. There was always something puzzling about Denis. When you married to him, in simple friendliness, he was very likely to freeze toward you in this fashion. You didn't know what you had said or done that was wrong.

Yet she persisted, determined to turn the knife in the wound, determined to know what his reactions were.

"It was the next day we—we were married," she said faintly. "Russ got me a room there. He was staying with his people in Astoria."

His warm smile flashed over her again. It was as if the sun had come out. There was something almost apologetic in his manner now.

"As if you needed to explain that," he said. But she was glad, just the same, that she had explained. The veil fled from Denis' eyes. There was a warm, friendly note in his deep voice again.

Glory and Lou had accepted the facts of Russ's death with their usual apathy, rousing themselves only to ask if Russ had left any insurance. He hadn't. Denis had paid the bills and Russ rested in a little Florida churchyard. Some day, Boots promised herself, she would go to his grave. She could not bear to think of Russ, so full of life, being stilled forever.

She was breakfasting this particular December Sunday with Denis at the Lafayette. French waiters moved deftly to and fro, absorbed in the intricacies of their service. Denis had ordered for them both: eggs Benedict, mushrooms, crisp triangles of buttered toast in a twisted napkin, pots of steaming coffee.

GLORIFYING YOURSELF

Diet Won't Reduce All Spots—Exercise Is Essential to Slender Waist and Hips

The girl who is overweight generally is most concerned about the extra pounds that persist in developing around her hips and waistline. She finds that elimination of fattening foods from her diet will make her lose a few pounds, and is delighted when she steps on the scales.

However, as a boy disappears when she uses a tape measure to find that although she weighs less, her hips and waistline measurements are the same.

Obviously, then, diet alone will not reduce hips and waist. You simply have to do daily exercises. Not just any exercise, but some that were invented especially for these tendencies-to-get-fat spots. Here's a good one:

Lie flat on the floor with arms outstretched, palms turned down and ankles together. Raise the right leg upward and, keeping shoulders flat on the floor, cross the right leg over the left until it is parallel with the left arm. Hold the position a few seconds and then put ankles together again. Repeat with the left leg, crossing it over the right one until the left foot is parallel with the right arm.

Make your shoulders stay on the floor and keep your knees stiff. If this exercise is done correctly, the waistline muscles are stretched and pulled, and surplus fat is rolled off the hips.

Profitable Yields From Fall Oats as Compared to Other Feed Crops

Many valuable findings have resulted from the experiments and demonstrations with winter and feed crops at the University of Arkansas College of Agriculture, Fruit and Truck Branch Experiment station, as revealed by G. W. Ware, assistant director in charge.

The climate and soils on the branch station represent large areas of southwest Arkansas, and the findings should be generally applicable for those sections.

Fall grown oats have repeatedly given en with corn, sorghums and other feed crops. The several varieties tested on the station averaged 79 bushels per acre in 1931, 16 bushels in 1932 and 60 bushels in 1933—a three-year average of 51½ bushels, after including the low yield crops of 1932. Figuring the time and the ease of handling the crop, the grazing and the soil protection it offers in the winter, and the resulting yields, many farmers are planning to make oats a chief feed crop.

Fall Oats Better

Fall planted oats exceeded oats planted in the spring even when occasional crop is entirely lost by the winter killing. Hardy varieties such as winter Turf, Culberson, Curtiss and Lee rarely killed in winter, but the less resistant Rustproof give good returns except in years of extreme winters.

Oats in south Arkansas give best results when drilled at the rate of 1½ to 2 bushels per acre on a firm, fertile well drained seed bed during the month of October.

Rye is a good winter cover and a good spring grazing crop. Abruzzi is the best variety, but the cost of seed is considerably higher than for common southern rye. Rosen rye is not adapted to this section.

Of several varieties of winter legume soil improvement crops, hairy vetch has been the most promising. Twenty to 30 pounds of inoculated seed per acre planted from September 15 to October 15 have given excellent returns. Another promising crop on the Fruit and Truck Branch Experiment Station is Lespedeza sericea, a new perennial legume often referred to as "poor land alfalfa" this Lespedeza continued to grow during the recent drouth and farmers would be justified in starting a small planting. Little is known yet as to its requirements; so no specific recommendations can be made.

For additional information on these and related subjects, see your county agent, or write the Fruit and Truck Branch Experiment Station.

Expect Southern California to Use Air Lanes for Gridion Wins

Team Looks Uncertain Because of Tremendous Amount of Rebuilding—Jones Lost Practically All of Last Year's Line by Graduation

By PAUL ZIMMERMAN

LOS ANGELES.—(T)—This is the year for Southern California's football team to travel the airways in search of victories unless history refuses to repeat itself.

While Coach Howard Jones has dropped only a genuine hint in this direction, there is plenty of evidence to indicate Troy's famous running attack will be made incidental in the season many consider will be the most disastrous in the head man's 10 years on the west coast.

Jones doesn't join in the weeping and waiting over the loss of most of his 1933 line as he touches up the tattered shift and groans an aerial barrage.

"Our team looks uncertain because of the tremendous amount of rebuilding to do," he said, "but while the material is green the boys are promising and strong and I believe they will accomplish much."

Statistics show that since he took up the Trojan armour, Southern California has in alternate years depended on forward passes for its scoring plays. Last season the quick line thrusts of "Cotton" Warburton, wily little all-American quarterback, turned the trick.

When Jones took a lone stand in the west in behalf of the new ball which he admits should be a boon to passing, he may have tipped his hand.

Certainly his material points toward the air. Warburton passes well, but is a better receiver because of his speed. Then the two first string ends, Captain Julius Beasco and Ward Browning, are basketball stars of the rangy, sticky-finger type. Cal Clements, blocking half and star punter, throws well.

Two years ago the men of Troy scored on every major opponent with passes. This is the year for their return to the air lines, paved as they are by the rules changes and the smaller ball.

We think everybody will be ready for school in a very short time this fall as crops are cut so short on account of the long dry spell that it will not take long to harvest them.
